

Bubble Counter

Blasenzähler

Georg-August-Universität Göttingen

Bubble Counter

The bubble counter is used to monitor gas flow (for example in a distillation apparatus).

Usually it is filled with liquid paraffin, as this reagent is inert towards most gases. The high viscosity of the oil also helps to keep track of the bubbles.

The tubes are secured to the bubble counter with tube clips.

The inlet tube is connected to the inlet pipe so that the gas has to stream through the bubble counter liquid.